

ago—perhaps the last time Cardinal Gibbons was in the White House—in affairs—when at the great risk of his own physical being and strength he spoke at the funeral of the late Bishop Doane before the thousands of people who heard his American countrymen. I stood by his side that day and was thrilled me as the venerable Cardinal spoke. He said that the only way to mandate the war was making upon all of us.

"I shall send my priests forth as champions in our army and navy," he said that day with patriotic fervor, "I'll go out on sick calls myself if they so one more priest may be spared to work in the ranks of our army and navy."

"Before his tomb I would carve the three cardinal theological virtues. First, I should carve the figure, the symbol of faith, that divine gift which he cherished so tenderly and practised so faithfully. He would brook no discussion where faith in God was concerned. He would fail in no duty of his office. And on his tomb I would place the symbol of hope, and then the symbol of the greatest, as St. Paul has said, of all the virtues. His administrative act was to place his name on a check for a sum of money that was devoted to the financial interests of the poor, the orphan, the poor whom he loved. Thus his life hour set for the ceremonies the head of the procession came out of the Cathedral and soled the slow and stately dome. Madison avenue from Fifty-first to Fifth street, and thence westward through Fifth street to the Fifth avenue entrance, was lined with spectators.

Mounted policemen led the way. Behind them, slowly playing strains of Chopin's Funeral March, came the navy's brass band, followed by cross bearers and acolytes. To the avenue they stretched a seemingly endless line of acolytes, seminarians and priests in white cassocks and surplices of white lace, the line of black robes of the monks, and the blue and white robes here and there with the splendid full dress uniforms worn by a detachment of the Knights of Columbus, the white or brown robes of the nuns, and the black and white robes of the cloistered monks, the brilliant ribbons of the Papal Knights of St. Gregory, the army and navy uniforms of high officers and the service and private uniforms that received commissions in their army and navy.

Allies Well Represented.

France was officially represented and soled by the French ambassador, and by officers of the British and French military services. The High Commissions of France, Great Britain, Belgium, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, and so on were officers of the Czecho-Slovak armies in their blue gray uni-

Cardinal's body from the catafalque in the cathedral on Wednesday night by which Miss Beatrice Wilson, a sculptor, made a death mask of the Cardinal. Then the body was placed in a bronze casket in the cathedral.

At 4 o'clock Bishop Hayes, vicar-general of Missouri, Mgr. Dunn and the rest of the Cardinal's official household entered the cathedral and the Cardinal was accompanied by acolytes and cross bearers only, said the last prayers. As the shadows grew dark in the big cathedral they held the bier away in the crypt beneath the high altar beside the bodies of Cardinal McKusky and Archbishop Hughes and Corrigan.

NEWMAN'S WIDOW GETS ALL

Former President of N. Y. Central Leaves More Than $1,000,000.

An estate of well over a million dollars is disposed of in the will of the late William H. Newman, former president of the New York Central and Hudson River railroad, which was read in the Biltmore Hotel. The will was filed for probate yesterday.

Betty Carter Newman, his widow, receives the bulk of the real estate, jewelry, automobiles, household effects, bric-a-brac and one-half of the residuary estate. She will get the income from the other half of the residuary estate through a trust fund.

F. T. KEATINGE ESTATE $181,955.
Deductions Leave $142,841 to Be Given Widow and Sons.

The appraisal of the estate of Thomas F. Keatinge, former president of the F. M. Moschetti & Co. Company, who died on July 13, 1917, was filed yesterday. He was treasurer and New York manager of the Yale & Towne Manufacturing Company. Mr. Keatinge was the inventor of a time lock and other safety devices for banks and once was engaged in the bank lock business at 84 and 86 Nassau street.

The appraisal shows a total estate of $181,955, and a net estate of $142,841, made up as follows: Real estate, $18,000; cash, $3,550; personal property, $151,075; stocks and bonds, $140,520. The estate is divided among the widow and sons.

VATICAN GETS PLEACE NUNCI.

Special Letter From Nuncio at Vienna Accompanies It.

Rome, Sept. 24.—It was announced by the Vatican to-day that the Austrian peace note was received Monday night, with a special letter from the nuncio at Vienna.

The delay in the arrival of the note was due to the closing of the frontier.
